

Many employees may work at home with the modern technology. Some people claim that it can benefit only the workers, and does not benefit employers at all.

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Due to the high pace of technological progress, individuals are capable of doing their jobs at home without being in the work place regularly. Some researchers assume that this phenomenon is of great benefit merely for the employee. Some others, however, assert vice versa, and think that it is beneficial for both employers and workers. I, personally, do wholeheartedly agree with the latter group.

First and foremost, freelancers get free of the burden of commuting to work in a regular basis. Not only can they save money allocated to transporting to work, but they also have significantly more time to spend with their family. Carrying out companies' projects at home, doer has much more concentration that leads to a better result for the workplace. In addition, some appealing points in regard to remote working is having a flexible time table for doing work and wearing casual and convenient cloth while doing duties to name just a few.

Considering employers profits, they should not spend huge sums of money to renting or buying a spacious venue as their office or purchasing some facilities like a computer system. Further and even more importantly, they can provide the hired people with lower rates of salary and even pay less money to insurance centers. Last but not least is associated with the atmosphere of the workplace. by delegating some tasks to freelancers, others can work in a calm and peace full place because of being fewer numbers of people around them.

By way of conclusion, I once again reaffirm my position regarding the issue of working in a remote place, and in my opinion it could be an effective way of working for both employee and employers.
