

Many museums charge for admission while others are free. Do you think the advantages of charging people for admission to museums outweigh the disadvantages?

Museums are playing pivotal role in countries' culture maintenance. In other words, every country try to keep their historical entities safe in these places. In this between, some people believe that there must be some entrance fee for these cultural beauties, while the others opine the opposite. In this essay, I will explore both points of view before giving my own opinion.

On the one hand, from ordinary people's vantage point, having admission fee, museums discourage poor people, who cannot afford the ticket price, from visiting these interesting areas. To make my point crystal clear, imagine a needy teenage student being enthusiastic about historical objects; how could he benefit from amusing museums without having enough money to buy a ticket? Hence, the emergence of somehow discrimination between different levels of society.

On the other hand, some experts argue that, the more money collecting from entrance fee in these artistic monuments, the better conditions being conducted for their maintenance. Meaning that, this collected money can spend for major expenses, few of ~~most important~~ of which are personnel salaries, bills including electricity and water or possible renovating expenditures. Besides, that a museum ~~sale~~ sells tickets for its entrance not only does not harm history-lovers, but also can help to preserve this priceless public wealth by restricting people ~~;~~; those who are not placing an importance ~~for on~~ it. Undoubtedly, paying a price for visiting these places can be seen as a device to estimate the visiting value for visitors.

At last, although pricing museums usage has some undeniable drawbacks, were I to choose, I would definitely vote for collecting this money. Having visited many museums myself, I have learnt that the museum whose entrance is not free is usually better equipped. Furthermore, the authorities can dedicate a part of this obtained budget to special deals for those interested people who cannot afford the entry charges.
