Please provide specific reasons, details and examples to support your response.

"Does children have a significant role to educate elders or not?" is a common question that there is many opinion about. Furthermore, some people pretend that elders are more beneficial for sharing. Others claim that the younger generation are more profitable for contributing. From my point of view, both of them can be effectively suitable teachers.

Firstly, some individuals argue that adults have much more experiences to teach younger adults. On the one hand, they claim that skills are achieving by living during years. Therefore, older people have properly strong potential to teach subjects, as well as resulting of the real experiments of life. On the other hand, many a parents is smarter than their charges because of the lessons of the destiny and the consequences of making mistakes.

Secondly, others maintain that not only do most of the youth have special intelligence but also they conceive rapidly complicated issues in the diverse environments.

Thanks to technology and the Internet, the knowledge of the current generation has had a noticeable growth.

In other words, children realize how to solve some complicated questions by the easiest solution. In this day and age, teenagers learn to develop a program for their problems of mathematics and it is an enjoyable hobby for them. For example, a friend of mine pointed out that her nephew has written a code for finding prime numbers. Although he is so younger than her, he taught her how it could be possible.

Last but not least, I personally believe that either olds or young individuals can be helpful to each other. Actually, we should consider moderation not stereotypes. For instance, in some situations younger generations can help older one and they should let them have advice. In addition, sometimes adults know some aspects that may be useful for younger adults and they should respect them and follow their suggestions.

In conclusion, life taught many precise experiences to older people. However, there are-is psychologicalst proves-proof that shows young people are fast learner and even clever educator. From my perspective, they can complete each other and help for understanding different parts of practices.
