

Some people believe that children should be allowed to stay at home and play until they are six or seven years old. Others believe that it is important for young children to go to school as soon as possible.

What do you think are the advantages of attending from a young age?

There is a common belief that children should stay at home before school age in order to make develop a better relationship with their parents. On the other hand, some other opine that they should attend nursery school to learn contraction with their peers. From my point of view, the latter is more beneficial for youngsters.

Sending children to school at an early age is believed not to have expected positive impacts on them. Some people argue that young children should stay at home to learn social behaviors from parents and also it will help them tighten their emotional bonds.

However, I believe there are many plus points in enrollment of children at preschool. Firstly, they will be in touch with greater verity of people as opposed to when they are at home and especially for ones that don't have any siblings. Thanks to this social environment that nursery school provides, pupils will learn how to engage with their counterparts an also will help develop their social competences. Children will benefit from these in many ways throughout their adolescence, such as making friends more easily, be more confident and independent, and also fell more self-esteem.

Secondly, as a result of modern life, both parents in many families have to have a full-time job. Thus, nursery school would be an appealing choice for parents to carry out their offspring responsibility for some hours. After working hours these families will have time to spend together.

In conclusion, in spite of the idea that going to preschool won't befit youngsters, I think this will prepare them to enter society more self-possessed.
