

Some parents think that childcare centres provide the best services for children of pre-school age. Other working parents think that family members such as grandparents will provide better care for their kids.

Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Some parents are of the opinion that playhouses offer the best services to take care of their children. While others believe the only people their pre-school children receiving attention from is grandparent arms. I strongly agree with the first group.

The day care centres provide a comprehensive child care programs. Not only do the kids are kept under a clever schedule but also they benefit from various trained and certified caregivers. Based on psychological researches, the pre-school years are known as crucial ages of children to bring up character formation. Besides, learning speed is extremely high during this period. Therefore, several children's attributes including teamwork, creativity, and social behaviour will be flourished in a friendly and specialized atmosphere. It is worth mentioning that the licensed staffs are playing an essential role to recognize and evaluate child both mental and physical health. Moreover, they have been taught to cultivate kid's inherent talents. The more sociable the children become, the more achievements will be gained in their adolescent.

As for grandparents, although they shower their grandchildren with their unconditional love, the high age gap between them may result in numerous problems. The blood relationship and strong emotional bond are those two factors which disable grandparents to respond "NO" to any request arise from children. Unreasonable though the demand is, the grandparents will definitely comply with it. In interfering in the way children are raised, parents hardly succeed to make a steady and desirable way of fostering their children. Moreover, most of the grandparents are in their elderly ages so they are usually impatient to tolerate the naughtiness. Thus, the humorous entertainments may be found as an easy solution to calm down these devilish little ones. Unfortunately, grandparents often fail to address the kids' needs.

To conclude, in order to ensure the development of children, it is important to understand their needs like the trainers and parents do. Since grandparents are old, they are not expected to play an effective educational role.
