

Childcare training courses should be mandatory for all parents. Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give your own opinion and include relevant examples.

Due in part to more complicated social relationships in societies, parenting issues have become more crucial recently. In this regard, there has been a controversial debate as to whether or not the guardians should pass some compulsory childcare /caring courses before their child's birth. Child being given birth/ being delivered. Personally, as I believe that many a complex in today's humans has emerged owing to a lack of parents' appropriate behavior, I wish the authorities had thought about this solution before. However, the mandatory structure for these preparation lessons can still be a subject of debate. In this essay, I will elaborate my opinion more clearly.

First and foremost, life was much simpler before. In other words, living in more crowded environments with various types of personalities, children are more prone to face difficulties in adapting themselves to their life environment. To exemplify, having a plain life style in calm and spacious farmland, hardly did the rural people be-confronted with environmentally physical and mental issues for raising their child, two of which are city-driven pollutions and cultural differences, hence less further-future health problems for their offspring. Thus, greater responsibilities lie with today's parents to rear their children successfully. Therefore, some helpful courses can pave the way for them to care their kids more effectively. The second question, however, is "should these courses be mandatory?"

On the other hand, although as I mentioned before parents training can be considered to be an intelligent idea, these programs had better to-be held gratis since not every parents s can afford the fees, especially the time that they should economically prepare themselves for their child's future expenses. Last but not least, as different families might have different circumstances, not only should these trainings teach general lessons, but also it is required to mention the way of behaving toward special cases, such as newborns with some disorders.

To put in a nutshell, I am of the opinion that the governments should have taken this into consideration that if they had provided better infrastructures for inexperienced parents' education, we would have a safer life today. Thus, enlightening parents on different aspects of children's nurturing can be useful as it could hopefully contribute to the future generation's health.
