Some people believe it is important to give gifts and presents to friends and family to show that we care about them. Others think that there are better ways to show affection to them. Discuss both the views and give your own opinion.

Offering a present has always been a symbol of love in human's history. In this regard, there is a controversial debate as to whether or not giving presents is the best way to express one's feeling. In my opinion, although exchanging gifts plays a significant role in human's relationships, it might not be sufficient to illustrate correctly the way and amount that people care about each other. To cast more clarification the following seems indispensable.

On the one hand, some people argue that presenting, ones can fully demonstrate his feeling toward his beloved person. To be more accurate, not only does the present have its practical aspect but also it shows how much he care about his person. For instance, when an individual spend a considerable time and effort to find a way to surprise his girlfriend with some valuable piece of cloths, which she needed exactly, he could clearly show that she is nothing but the first priority of his life. The question however is, what if his normally routine behavior shows the opposite?

On the other hand, based upon recent researches, there are some people trying to compensate for their unforgettable errors by showering their partner with various gifts. To exemplify, many a spouse tries to cover up his affair with gifting some lavish jewellery to his wife. At first, the woman might be deceived by this gift, but ultimately luxurious jewellery cannot replace the missed commitment in their married/matrimonial life.

At last, the main conclusion to be drawn from this discussion is that though pleasant, presents cannot guarantee the true affection. Thus, they must be accompanied by reasonable behavior.