

Some people believe that allowing children to make their own choices on everyday matters (such as food, clothes, and entertainment) is likely to result in a society of individuals who only think about own wishes. Other people believe that is important for children to make decisions about matters that affect them. Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

Giving the opportunity to children to make their own decisions about daily issues that are related to them is a debatable topic.

To some, by giving the right to choose to select their own clothes, foods, or plays, children become independent and can decide freely on some important matters that they will face in the future. Moreover, not only does it helps to rely on their own decisions, but also they have to accept the responsibilities of their selection. In other words, these choices are correlated to them; therefore, clearly, they would be made by themselves.

However, some people think allowing children to make their own choices on everyday matters may lead ~~to they them to~~ be selfish and only focus individually on their own wishes. In this case, children do not care probably about the opinions of those around them.

It should be noted, this matter may depend on which age children are. As many psychologists believe that children under 7 years of age, had better decide on their own matters based on their ideas. It helps to form their character gradually in the childhood and they learn considerably to have self-confidence.

In conclusion, I think parents should give the chance to children to experience various conditions. Actually, there should be a balance between the decisions of children and parents about daily matters. Hence, for such simple matters like food, clothes or entertainment, ~~it had better~~ children had better make their own choices, but not always. At first, children must learn to respect the wishes of others in the family occasionally. Consequently, it is a vital educational problem that the needs and the opinions of others be the preoccupation of children especially in the future and in society.