

Majority of children are raised by their grandparent due to the fact that their parents are busy working.

Nowadays, in line with all aspects of life, parenting is undertaking great changes. Seeking ~~for~~ a way to meet the ends, parents are fully busy at work, thereby having short time to spend with their children. Alternatively, Grandparents are shouldering the responsibility of raising their grandchildren which is greatly admired and ~~have~~has plenty of advantages, though including lots of lacks that are only compensated at the presence of parents.

On one hand, grandparents are pure models of morality, love and values, thus they are able to effectively pass down the sense of right and wrong, a set of absolute upon which an individual can set his future life. Besides, when it comes to childcare, grandparents are the only choice that would lessen the load in a safe manner which leads to a less stressing life for the parents. Let us not forget either that if grandparents are capable to do some care, ultimately they are financially supporting, since it burdens a high expenditure on parents to hire a childcare assistant.

Although all the currently above-mentioned notions are of value, the pivotal role of parents in fostering a ~~welfare-decent~~ child is undeniable. First of all, childcare, especially those ~~of for~~ early ages, are fully demanding for grandparents. Secondly, being exposed to different types of behavior by parents and grandparents, children might show up with inappropriate behavior. Finally, Only the time that all requirements of children are met, could they optimize their emotional development, otherwise they would feel the lack of affection, while witnessing their peers' family bond.

Undoubtedly, children brought up by their grandparents would encounter plenty of difficulties in their lives. However, it might also have ~~plenty-a lot~~ of advantages for the family.