

Many people believe that learning a foreign language is a very difficult task. What are the most difficult things about learning a foreign language? What is the best way to overcome them? Explain and include your personal experience or knowledge of these problems.

More recently, due in part to international relationships in today's modern era, learning foreign languages for interacting with people of other languages (other languages people?) has become a critical issue for many individuals. In this regard, there are many questions as to why it is so difficult to learn a new tongue and how we can conquer these obstacles. In this essay, I will elaborate some reasons causing these difficulties and few solutions to overcome them.

First and foremost, the older an individual becomes, the harder he can learn a new language. To be more accurate, as the fear of making mistakes is growing gradually in human mind, getting older, hardly can a person acquire a new language without any trouble. Furthermore, lack of reliable resources hinders people from learning colloquial words. To exemplify, sometimes, studying many academic old-fashioned grammar points, students would face problems in having friendly informal communication with their native friends as the way of their speaking is usually uncommon. Last but not least, the pronunciation is a mysteriously crucial aspect of learning new languages. In other words, sounds are different in various languages. Sometimes for some nations it is too difficult to pronounce certain letters. As a case in point, letter "R" can hardly be pronounced by the French, hence facing language barriers in some situations.

For addressing the aforementioned issues, I believe, first of all it is necessary to being immersed in the intended language, which means, for instance, listening to music, reading novels before falling asleep, following podcasts and trying to socialize in social pages, all in the learning-learnt tongue. Moreover, it is essential to try to speak and write recklessly/bravely, no matter how many mistakes would be made. In addition, it is required to clarify the main intention of learning new language, as the resources and education methods could be different for formal and informal objectives. Most importantly, finding some native speakers to grab subtle points implicitly during communication can help significantly.

To put in a nutshell, although learning a new language can have its own undeniable challenges, proper methods should be taken into consideration to deter straining and aversion in individuals.
