Every year several languages die out. Some people think that this is important because life will be easier if there are fewer languages in the world.

To what extent do you agree or disagree with this opinion?

The inevitable fact is multitude of languages have been spoken by different nation's people world over, yet, several languages have vanished every year. Some people argue that this incident has brought more convenience in their daily life. This subject will be considered in this essay to realize whether diminished languages is beneficial to society or not.

Some individuals point out that language is indicative of national history and ethos which should be preserved and passed to the next generation. They claim that a country's specific character cannot be maintained unless people protect their local language as it is symbol of their ancestors' life and ancient traditions. For instance, in my mother tongue, there are a lot of epic poems from famous poets like Saadi and Hafez which can directly connect you with past century of my country. If Persian language will be died out in future, it is crystal clear that the next generation even will not know about our memorable poets and our literature easily will be demolished.

Others mention that disappearing more and more languages annually can strongly contributes to the society. They believe that international communications are challenging enough even with one unique language let alone the existence of variety of languages. In order to create a worldwide village, all governments, enterprises and individuals should collaborate to define an international language and adopt a required measures to provide education for all citizens to be able to speak it not only without major mistakes but also fluently.

I am personally of the notion that places a priority in highlighting a language as a cosmopolitan language because an international business or education communication, oversea purchases, social contacts and an acquaintance to different parts of world's cultures will be easier only if is there a prevalent spoken language among people. Although English is determined as an international language, still there are many nations which are unable to speak it.

To conclude, some people agree with the trend of fading more languages occasionally because they assume that less languages in the world will be result in easier and more pleasurable life. Based on above evidences, my firm conviction Is this trend is not only is not detrimental to society but also can facilitate people's life.
