

Many parents and teachers think that we should ~~supervisor~~ supervise children's activities, others s say that children should have more freedom.

Discuss both views and give your opinion

Supervising children's activities by both parents and schools has always been a controversial subject. Though some advocate controlling children's activities by adults, others support more flexible methods of parenting. In this essay I would clarify both sides though, my personal view is in favor of the latter attitude.

On one hand, supervising children could partially save them from various risks, especially in today's world where children have easy access ibility to a wide variety of information through the Internet some of which might be unreliable and misleading, providing children with inappropriate data for their age, ; pornography could be an excellent example in the case. What is more, ~~the~~ free internet connection at school has enabled pupils to create relationships freely via diverse ranges of applications, leading them to fall victim in-to abduction or negative influence of peer pressure. In ~~this points~~ such circumstances, supervising this age group, who could not distinguish fake information as well as tricksters among the ocean all-flow of information, might seem s rational.

Conversely, it has been proved that severe restrictions in the nurturing process has opposite effect in some cases in that ~~avoiding-preventing~~ children from doing something might adversely stimulate their sense of curiosity, causing ~~they-them to~~ do that later whenever they find themselves alone. This could put them in a more hazardous situation in-which might be irrecoverable later on. Besides, it is advisable for both teachers and parents s to act as a role model, leading children to absorb codes of conduct s and ground ~~role-rules~~ of behavior from them. This provides s an opportunity for children to ~~experiencing-experience~~ anything on their own while carrying conventions in mind which they had ~~been taught~~ thought at school and home as well.

All in all, I wholeheartedly opine children are required to grow up-up under indirect adults supervision both in parental and educational environments s, trusting their abilities and recognition not only ~~do~~ provides them with a more enjoyable childhood, but also they can ~~have~~ having more mature adulthood.
