

Countries are becoming more and more similar because people are able to buy the same products anywhere in the world.

Do you think this is positive or negative development?

Nowadays, people have more choices for purchasing or visiting compared to the past. This issue is affected by uniformity of countries all over the world. However, its negative impacts on the tradition of each country cannot be denied.

In my opinion, similarity among countries plays an important role in ~~ousting-eliminating~~ some limitations for people. In other words, everyone can access a large number of various products with different brands more easily. Not only will they buy more items, but also they can visit several shopping malls with new design. Therefore, the mentioned advantage has facilitated people's life.

On the other hand, in historical terms, tradition is another main factor for any country. Even though availability of more items aids people in life, it can ~~has-have~~ some negative effects on traditional jobs or customs of the country. For instance, those who work in traditional fields will lose their job and income regrettably. In addition, some handcraft products are absolutely precious ~~that-which~~ leads to creating more job opportunities which in turn preserves ~~the~~ traditions of the country.

Last but not least, only if countries' cultural heritage is preserved, will ~~the~~ tourism be developed dramatically. Most of the tourists travel to the other places at which artefacts and traditional customs can be observed. Also, I strongly believe that income of any country will be increased considerably through ~~raising-the rise in the~~ number of tourists, so the manner the government attracts them is vital.

Consequently, further to the above explanation, similarity of countries can be quite effective in people's life. However, preserving cultural heritage of each country is inextricably bound up with its traditions and customs. Eventually, the mentioned diversity brings about more and more positive impacts in the world.