

Some people think that prison sentences should not be used in dealing with criminals. Education and job training should be used instead.

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Today, to deal with the crime issues some believe education and job training should be used instead of prison sentences. Although, this is such an interesting idea that prison is to be replaced with education and job training, to what extent ~~it is~~ it practical and ~~closing~~ close to reality?. In my opinion, it would not be useful unless the way of returning to crime was closed for prisoners.

Replacing of education and job training with prison sentences should be more than just a word. It is useless if prison will not be used but the violence of criminals are continued by prisoners after ~~they~~ they were released. I contend that criminals were not born as criminals and some terrible situations such as extreme poverty and weapon ~~accessability~~ accessibility make people ~~to become~~ criminals. Nevertheless, there are some instances that criminals commit ~~the~~ violent crimes and in this case prisons are more suitable than education or job training. There are some doubts that those dangerous criminals can be trained as a job seeker or an educated person.

On the other hand, we need more control on the criminals' behaviours. However, we should make criminals more confident to deal with the real world. In this case for example, many people think all criminals are so dangerous for the community, so it is ~~nessecary~~ necessary to raise ~~the~~ public awareness ~~public~~ that some crimes are not so ~~dangerious~~ dangerous and they should be able to return to community and eventually find their social positions as a regular individual.

In conclusion, I believe the sentences of prison can be used, but it depends on the cases. In some cases, where we deal with capital and serious crimes the imprisonment will be more suitable, but when we talk about petty crime in which criminals can go back to regular social life by training, the experision of education and job training is more ~~advicable~~ advisable.
