

It is important for children to learn the difference between right and wrong at an early age. Punishment is necessary to help them learn this distinction. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this opinion? What sort of punishment should parents and teachers be allowed to use to teach good behavior to children?

One of the necessary aspects of ~~growing-raising~~ a child is the ability to know the difference between good and bad from the first years of his life. Some people believe that these could be approached through punishing a child. I think that there could be ~~more-better~~ ways to teach children and punishment could only be considered in specific situations.

Today there are still those who believe that the only way to manage a child is punishment. This opinion is mostly popular among older parents and others who are not educated enough. However, the first message punishment sends is that the child is not a good person. Another bad idea the child understands is it is acceptable for older people to use their ability to bully others, especially when it is a physical behavior.

There are better ways which ~~punishment~~ could ~~be~~ replaced by ~~them~~ punishment. When children are in a group, for example a group of classmates, they could be taught easier. Not only do they feel that the rule is for everybody, but also they could be encouraged to obey the rules in a group. Furthermore, parents and teachers should be conscious about their own behavior as they are role models for younger youngsters. Sanctions and time out are some alternatives for those who do not understand the advantages of right tasks. For example, a teacher could sometimes ask a student to stay in the classroom while others are leaving the place for a break.

To Sum up, despite the fact that many people support the idea of punishing ~~elderlies-children~~ to improve their consciousness, I believe that it is not true. There are better ways to have a disciplined young community. I think it is the government's duty to teach caregivers how to behave ~~with~~ toward the younger ones.
