

It is more important for the government to spend money on art and music museums than on facilities like playgrounds, public swimming pools?

How to allocate the budget for different sections of ~~the~~ society has sparked a heated debate for decades. Some people believe that the government should fund all the organizations the same, but the others oppose this idea and give the priority to crucial parts. I personally maintain that more money should go to welfare services. In the following paragraphs, I will elaborate on my arguments.

The first and foremost reason that comes to mind is health. With respect to the positive effects of exercise on health, the government should provide well-equipped facilities. There are many people with chronic diseases such as diabetes which should they access sports facilities, exercise can play a key role in controlling their illness. Moreover, suffering from obesity, people can lose or control their weight with access to gyms. ~~The~~ statistics shows that the more investments governments make in public sport, the more budget of health they could save. Besides, due to the fact that we are living in a stressful world, should people in charge consider sports facilities for employees, their function will be increased.

Second, some individuals hold that sport environments can protect people especially adolescents from social harms like an addiction. In other words, these places can play a vital role in their sociality. For instance, the young generation can discuss with others, benefit from their experiences especially those of adults which in turn improve their social skills, and people can set an ambitious goal and pursue it with their peers.

However, we should not neglect the arts. It goes without saying that the world without arts would be mundane. Besides, painting, sculpturing, and handicraft of countries are imperative to their tourism industry, thereby contributing to the governments' turnover.

To make a long story short, I opine that the priority of the governors should be the welfare of people and they ought to sort out citizen's priorities based on it. To put it simply, the pressing issues of the country, namely health, should be their first priority.
