

For most people it is difficult to give speech or presentation to audience. Some people say it is good for students to learn how to give a speech. Why is it essential for people to give a wealthy speech? Do you agree or disagree that this skill should be taught at school?

The general opinion is that giving speech is tough work and it is better to be taught at school. I agree with the given statement ~~due to~~because it is intertwined with all parts of our life and it is inevitable work.

To begin with, every successful person during ~~the~~ life needs to give a speech from a simple ~~lecture-~~talk at a friend's wedding ceremony to a business presentation. Psychologists believe this skill has a considerable influence on people's behaviors such ~~as an~~ increasing self-confidence. Moreover, people who grow this skill often could express their ideas more and they might defend themselves against the others better.

With considering the essential role of a good speech, some people believe it should be included in the school curriculum because speeches as a soft skill need to be practiced more and more until ~~to-~~they are internalized and in a long time master it. Furthermore, school is an appropriate ground to achieve this goal meaning children can practice even in front of their friends without losing their face or paying money. Although, there ~~are~~is an opinion claiming that children need to focus on their lessons and learn more important issues like morality in school, we can see successful people learn this skill from their childhood.

To sum up, giving speeches plays an important role in people's life. Which not only enhances people's abilities but also gives them better paths to the future. Besides, it is better that this skill ~~to~~ be taught from childhood in school as a suitable place that is conducive to learning/causes children to learn and practice without stress and in the best condition ~~to learning~~.
