

Some people claim that not enough of the waste from homes is recycled. They say that the only way to increase recycling is for governments to make it a legal requirement.

To what extent do you think laws are needed to make people recycle more of their waste?

There is a controversy among people as to whether some rules should be imposed to let people participate people in recycling waste more than before or there is-are other alternatives s-way to encourage people to more cooperate in this process. While I believe that it is necessary to make laws to forced people helping more in recycling, I cannot ignore the importance of enhancing social awareness.

Nowadays, people and governments worry about the environmental issues and always try to preserve it-the environment by doing /undertaking/implementing protecting programs and introducing new laws. Recycling is an initial process to save the environment. We have many rules about other environmental problems. Since there are no specific rules for recycling. If there is no rule, people are likely to become careless about it. On the other view, people always obey rules not just for their consciously ly but rather. They obey rules because there would be punishment or fine if they violate laws. For instance, until-unless people did not be are penalized, they dodid not obey the traffic rules.

Moreover, environmentalists believe that also-social awareness is also important. There is a big help to the environment and governments that people divide the recyclable and non-recyclable wastage s and pack them accordingly. If media raise environmental awareness, most of the people do waste separation before through-throwingaway them away. Plus, people must be informed as to how they should divide all kinds s of wastage s. So the best way to cup-cope with these problems is environmental awareness.

To make a long story short, although it is true that governments should impose laws and punish people who violate the rules, governments should not ignore developing environmental awareness.
