

Mona Doorsian

Some suggest that young people should take a job for a few years between school and university.

Discuss what the advantages and disadvantages might be for people who do this.

There it is more and more evident for students to work for a period of time rather than going straight to the university. There are some positive points to this, but I think it has also some risks which could lead to some kinds of problems.

The most obvious disadvantage of getting a job is that you may find that you cannot get a university place at a later stage. This is ~~due to~~because there may be a lot of competition for places, and the longer you wait, the harder it may be to get one. You could even find that the course you want has been changed or dropped.

Another negative aspect is that you can lose the ability of studying. For example, school students are trained to use a range of study skills, which help them achieve academic success. However, if you are not using these skills regularly, it is easy to forget them. This could make university life much harder.

On the other hand, there are several positive outlooks ~~to toward getting~~ a job. One of them is that you can become independent. For instant, people who earn their own money can rent their own apartment. Additionally, some of the money can be saved and used to pay for university fees. Another significant benefit is that working gives you some time to think about what you would really like to study. This is very beneficial if you are unsure about your future career.

To sum up briefly, ~~from my point of view~~ there are arguments for and against the idea of working between school and university. from my point of view The important thing is to be aware of both aspects and choose the path that best suits your personal situation.