

there is some doubt as to whether people who living in a country with a different language have some difficulties such as serious problems in the new society in it. However, in my opinion those people have lots of problems especially in social ones.

To begin with, communication is the most important of humankind's needs. People who have to live in other countries cannot communicate well due to lack of their skill to speak in a language of the destination's country. Therefore, they become isolated and face lots of social problems. For instance, a person who wants/seeks to work or study in England should acquire English well while in many cases they do not have enough time/despite their time constraints. So he/she could not speak with people when arriving in England. Plus, maybe people bother her/his-him because of her/his color or language. So in most of the cases immigrants prefer to communicate with others. After a while they face serious problems such as depression.

Nowadays, people who immigrate to a country which has different people and languages usually complain about its racial-racist citizens. Although it is true that we are living in the 21st century, the world still has many racists. Immigrants cannot be comfortable when they go out so they prefer to appear in society. For example, news broadcasted recently about 3 English man-men who attacked a Chinese because they thought the coronavirus just started in London because of those people.

To make a long story short, I think immigrants deal with a lot pf_of problems and one of themone of which is preventing avoiding being in society.
