

In some countries it is thought advisable that children begin formal education at four years old, while in others they do not have to start school until they are seven or eight.

How far do you agree with either of these views? ITE4

The age at which full time schooling for children are recommended, is a contentious issue and is various between four to eight years old around the world . To my mind, though the formal education ease learning some curriculums for children such as foreign languages or music, the kids who are under seven years old need to acting with their peers, parents as well as their siblings and those years are too soon for them to start a full time education.

Firstly, learning from their parents and playing with their brothers or sisters are the inevitable parts of learning for kids who have less than seven years old, because they have not enough abilities to start relation in a new environment and with a strange people or attend in full time class without their father or mother. Having high emotional relation with their parents, the kids are deprived from their parents by full time school. That is why we see profoundly negative propounds-effect on their character. Also it is considerable that in recent days most of the parents are educated and they are able to play role as a teacher's for their families.

Secondly, Physical, social, emotional and cognitive development of boys and girls are depends on their active, creative and outdoor play. They need to elapse time with their peers as well as their parents in outside of the home and if we limit them in school, it will affect their emotional and physical grow up.

Last not least, it is undeniable that child can attend in the educational part-time courses that help them to learn some additional ability such as painting or dancing. These courses not only have the positive effects on their abilities, but also preparing them for Fulltime Schooling.

To sum up, I for one, believe that seven years old is a suitable age for starting the formal education and it is better for the younger children to play outdoors with other boys and girls and attend in part time courses.
