The nuclear family is well adapted to move geographically due to its size.

Do you think children benefit in any way for moving?

Do you think the advantages outweigh the disadvantages?

The small family that is normally included includes parents and children can easily move everywhere because of the extent of it. In my opinion shifting can be beneficial for the children but of course there could be some detriments too, but it seems to me the profits are more important and valuable than the disadvantages.

First of all relocating can be extremely informative and entertaining for children, due tobecause being in a new place will help them to discover and obtain a vast information about culture, geography and anthropology, it can be an opportunity to make fiends with new friends and improve children's communication skills as well. Considering that when a family moves to a new place it is crucial that all the family members participate notably about in make making decisions like where they must go and also division of the responsibilities like packing, it can be a practice for their future to be responsible and successful in social life.

On the other hand, relocating all the time can be easily detrimental in different ways, for instance while a family is living in a particular area children have their friends in school or in the neighborhood, they get used to their teachers and perhaps they have plans for a particular time. Therefore, when family decided decides to move it can hurt children emotionally it will be hard for them to leave their friends, schools, or plans besides the mental damage can affect their future or stay with them for the rest of their life.

As a result, relocating can have many advantages for the nuclear families as it is easy for them but it can hurt their children too if they are not aware about their children's emotions.
