People in the lime light have a responsibility to set an example for others by their good behavior.

Do you agree?

Famous people are responsible to have good manners as a role model. In my opinion, this is true and vital specifically for young and adolescent strata of society since in their mind well-known people such as actors or singers are like a ~~God~~ god and they follow celebrities' lifestyles all the time.

Nowadays due to social media such as Twitter or Instagram you can get lots of information about anyone you know or you even do not know just by searching on the internet including details about people's personal life. thus, in such a life where~~which~~ celebrities are in the spotlight more than others and people are following ~~celebrities~~ their lifestyle, beliefs and ideas continuously, they are role models for many of us~~,~~. therefore, it is significantly important that they must be/set a good example by their good manners for us notably for the new generation who are more interested in following and imitating their way of life.

On the other hand, we cannot~~can not~~ expect celebrities to have no mistakes because nobody is ~~not~~ perfect and if they try to show themselves ~~in~~ on social media ~~that~~ as to how amazing and perfect they are it is like they are superhuman not a human being. However, what we need to see in well-known people is who they are genuinely with their power points and flaws it seems to me this is the most important lesson that we ought to learn and teach to the next-generations, otherwise our children will experience a high-tension situation for perfection. As a result, celebrities must have good manners as role models but it is also significant that they should have the right to be themselves authentically.
