

The best way for a society to prepare its young people for leadership in government, industry, or other fields is ~~by~~ instilling in them a sense of cooperation, not competition.

Write a response in which you discuss the extent to which you agree or disagree with the claim. In developing and supporting your position, be sure to address the most compelling reasons and/or examples that could be used to challenge your position.

Every society's future depends on how it grows up the younger generations. The way it chooses to treat their juvenile, foresees the success of its future. Either teachs them to cooperate with each other in order to bring up their government or encourages them to compete with others to win best positions. The inevitable outcomes of this decision, are the important factors which each government must deal with.

To begin with, I, personally, prefer to engender my children in a society, ~~where-which~~ aims to instilling in youth the sense of cooperation. Cooperating has far-reaching positive impacts in souls of young people, which cannot be neglected. Simply put, the children who learn to work in a group usually accepts their weakness. It will give them time to focus on what they are great at. A good illustration of this, is that an individual who can manage better than others, instead of knowing scientific facts of a project, gives special tasks to ~~ones-those~~ who are capable of doing its ~~sciences~~scientific aspect. This approach precludes superfluous actions to waste time and the success of project will happen sooner.

In other words, in a society where ~~ones-one~~ cooperates with others, deferential is the main factor. People always knows their strength, and overcome others' weaknesses by overlapping them (with their ~~strengths~~selves). I am of the opinion that competition makes people aggressive. This will affect their behavior. More specifically, I am living in a country ~~which-where~~ everyone competes with others. That manner puts our country in jeopardy. No one helps others in order to win a position in a better place in states organisations. They are winners due to hiding their weaknesses. The downsides ~~to/~~of competitions are failing projects which no one accepts the responsibility of the failure of.

To sum up, the most rational conclusion from what ~~I said-above~~has been said above, is that cooperation is the key to build up a society's future. It is better for the youth to work in groups instead of being a winner of every little game of lives. Veneration is among those who help each other. It will help them to deal with their responsibilities over a projects and improve the sense of leadership in next generations.
