One of these changes is that the relationship between family members are not as close as in the past and little by little people are getting used to such a change. Some reasons are said to be responsible for this issue and obviously it has some considerable effects on society.

Some changes in structure of families and the widely availability of different kinds of media are considered as why families tend to less communicate with each other less. In other words, in modern life, as a result of economic growth there are more small and nuclear families instead of extended families. So young family members have had the benefits of more freedom and mobility which allows them to leave their family and live independently. Also, in today's world, people have been widely provided with various types of media such as television and social media which gradually prevent family members from communicating with each other. These changes have made-weakened/undermined strong bonds of families to weaken.

Unfortunately, children and youngsters in families in which members do not get along well with each other might experience some social problems. If younger family members do not get enough attention from their parents, they would feel enough emptiness in their life. Consequently, this may cause they-them tonight try taking drugs/experiment with drugs. Moreover, children in such families would not be able to learn how to communicate properly. Being not a skilled enough~~enough-skilled~~ communicator, children might loss-lose great opportunities in the future like job and education.

In conclusion, some reasons including the current trend toward nuclear families and excessive using of media are responsible for why families are not close compared with the past. This phenomenon has some consequences for people in particular children in the future.
