

Some people think that only the government can make significant changes in society, while others think that individuals can have a lot of influence. What is your opinion?

A number of citizens believe that just the administration is able to cause remarkable changes in society, whereas some others consider that folks could be significantly effective. In my opinion, both of these ideas can be true, it is very complicated because it is not just about politics, every great change in society is associated with many elements such as culture, economy, populations' age range, religion and even history.

When in society the majority of the population are young and educated, science has more value than religion, in other words, a rational union instead of irrational thus, we can say that individuals can have tremendous influence. Because youths have their life in front, they consider about future therefore, they intend to make big changes. Especially, in a logical community with democratic politics. On the other hand, communities with an old population that most of them-whom have outage beliefs and ideas, nothing special could happen. In circumstances that the majority of inhabitants have no eagerness or they do not feel like needing any change. (جمله فعل ندارد)

The government has the power to make the law, which gives a vast power to make changes in a good way or bad way. By the power of the law you can limit individual's-individuals' activities or give them more opportunities. In the human histories we have a lot of politicians who made notable changes, Abraham Lincoln for instanced or Angela Merkel. However, it seems to me, for an effective change apart from the government that intends to happen the citizens must be ready for that change to-or otherwise, it can be extremely difficult or take a long time.

As a result, in society individuals and the government have their own influence, if their tendency to change is in the same aspect it will happen rapidly and will be lasting, otherwise it can lead to a conflict.
