Zoos are significant places that serve human entertainment and people's education about the wild animals. Some individuals claim ~~that zoos~~ these facilities play an important role in protecting endangered species. However, I personally believe that the animals should have the right to live in their natural habitats. This essay will discuss both views.

On the one hand, some people feel that zoos are useful for the following reasons. Firstly, they are regarded as safe places that keep the animals away from poachers. Furthermore, they preserve the animals away from the danger of extinction and habitat destruction by both offering breeding programs and providing an environment resembling their natural territory. In addition, people have an opportunity to become aware about the wild animals.

On the other hand, most of the zoos are artificial environments that constrain an animal's natural life. As an example, some animals which live in social groups in the wild ~~can not~~ cannot adapt to a solitary life in enclosures ~~places and cages~~. Besides, they suffer from cruelty at the hands of zookeepers and visitors who do not respect animal ~~them~~. The reason for this is that the zoos' ~~stuff~~ staff mistreat them by providing insufficient food and medical care.

To conclude, although some zoos may have positive effects on animals' conservation, overall ~~I~~ overallly think holding animals behind ~~the~~ bars is cruel.
