

In Many countries children are engaged in some kind of paid work. Some people regard this as completely wrong, while others consider it ~~as~~-valuable work experience, important for learning and taking responsibility.

What are your opinions on this?

Nowadays child labour can be clearly seen in many places around the world. Some believe this trend is not right, whereas others claim work helps them to be independent and responsible.

Firstly, there is no doubt that education is the most reliable way to gain success for children. Moreover, Children learn better when they interact with their peers and education provides them with the best access to the primary sources in different fields of science as well as the enabling environment for conversation whereby they express their own ideas.

Another important factor is the role that education plays in child development. Nowadays it is clear that childhood development is the foundation for an individual's future overall health and happiness, ~~however~~although, a good education usually needs financial support which is not affordable for all families.

On the other hand, there are many examples of successful individuals who start working at an early age. Given that, we cannot deny the fact that there are some pros for children who start working at early ages. For instance, working can help minors to learn soft skills very soon and to be responsible. Although they can barely earn a meagre income, for jobs which usually ~~does do~~ not suit adults, ~~that~~ which helps them to learn how to follow the instructions and make progress in the long run.

To sum up, unfortunately even though education is beneficial in many ways for children it is not an option for all children. However, there are other ways to provide minors with useful instructions to make progress such as working at early ages.
