Do you agree or disagree with the following statement?

The government should spend money on the construction of new buildings rather than on the preservation of old buildings.

Rapidly developing of the city life makes the governments meet more needs of building residency areas in the cities. Some towns have the opportunity of growing in their outskirts, while the others are limited within their borders. Nowadays, it has been a big debate on whether to investing in new buildings or ~~preserving~~ preserve the old ones. Although my preference goes for maintaining the old city structure, I cannot deny the necessity of creating new living areas.

By ~~with~~ the growth of the young population in downtowns, most of the investors believe they need to build modern new apartments rather than keep the old ones alive. However, most of the citizens are eager to ~~survive~~ preserve the old buildings as the history of their town. Plus, the old structure of a city represents the characteristics of the people and their culture through the ages. Moreover, to ~~make~~ create more living space for the new generation, as it is a high demand, governments can be helpful. For instance, they are able to allocate more loans and introduce facilities for investors to redecorate and modernize the inside of the old apartments utilizing creativity, while the out face of the city structure remains intact.

On the other hand, to ~~make~~ provide more places for a comfortable living, instructor companies should explore the suburbs for new constructions. Most of the towns have the capacity of growing outwards. In addition, ~~lots~~ large portions ~~of the~~ of the population are interested in spacious houses in a more quiet, peaceful environment. To fulfil the request ~~to meet this demand~~ to this end, governments may facilitate the relevant regulations and provide loans for families.

Generally speaking, the critical role of governments in both preserving the old city structures and developing the new urban areas, is undeniable. However, they cannot only stick to renovating the aged downtown, but also they have to meet the current needs of the future generation.
