

As people in cities are becoming richer, more of them can afford to buy cars. In consequence, city centers are becoming more congested and polluted all over the world, what are the main causes of this problem and what are solutions?

Since people in towns have become wealthier, most of them could pay for buying cars. As a result, city centers have become more crowded and contaminated, there are various reasons and solutions behind this issue, this essay will explain the causes and offer some solutions.

One of the most important reasons would be our modern life style, in this modern era area, family members are working and they need their own car for traveling to work. Most of the time public transportation is not available, especially in times when which people need to go to work and buses or the subway is so crowded, to put it simply, public transportation is not convenient, as a matter of fact family members prefer to be independent with this idea if they had their own car, they would go anywhere in anytime that they wanted. Therefore, it would be easy to access for them.

There are several measures which could be taken to identify the severity of problem, so more attention should focus on developing public transportation, to be more specific, we can improve these kinds of transportations such as trains, buses and taxis transportations with more convenient accessibility, reasonable prices and no fewer time limitations in comparison with private cars.

Another significant solution could be making commercial breaks which show people the pros and cons of using those two different transportations. Simply put, what I am trying to say is creating a new culture by using the media help.

To put it in nutshell, from my perspective, cheap and convenient public transport must be the answer to the ever-increasing problem of traffic congestion.
