

Groups or organizations are an important part of some people's lives. Why are groups or organizations important to people? Use specific reasons and examples to explain your answer.

Groups and organizations are the unity among people who have similar ways of thinking. The function of creating groups and organizations might ~~be~~ vary. However, every group has some sort of plans and targets to do some task. A human needs other people's help to commit special task. In my opinion, people feel more complete if they are a member of a group.

Firstly, Groups and organizations comprise of different hierarchies of people with different expertise in different fields. The people with expertise in one field can apply and use their experience, intelligence and experience and finally the output result of the group will be ~~higher~~ excellent. Consider completing a software project. People with expertise in only one field cannot make the project succeed. It requires a software architect, project Manager, quality control manager, product manager, business analyst. Software ~~developer~~/architects focus on designing the software and Quality control Manager focuses on assuring the quality of the software. Software architects are not aware of testing the software and other related ~~issues~~ stuff and similarly the quality control engineer could not perform the task of a software architect, but the blending of these two people can create an energetic output. Based on this reason people create groups and organizations.

Secondly, it is true that in any group or organization you could find new people from a diversity of social and economic ~~backgrounds~~ conditions. Therefore, many people decide to join ~~to~~ these groups just for meeting new people. It is known that strong friendships are born inside these groups. For example, I joined ~~to~~ a group to discuss ~~having to have~~ a better lifestyle and new books.

Last but not least, people usually join ~~to~~ groups in order to share interesting topics ~~about as for~~ themselves ~~or as for~~ the other members in the group because they like to teach and learn issues related to that topic. Many times, members take these exchanges of information as a delightful thing which makes them avoid their own problems or even as means ~~of for~~ relaxing.

To wrap it up, groups and organizations have been playing a critical role in the development of our society. People usually consider their group and organization important for ~~life~~ lives because it provides them ~~with~~ satisfaction and they learn and teach.
