

Test 1- Writing Task 2- Some people are born with certain talents.

It is a common belief that every person is born with special talents. If this talent is discovered and developed then it will result in amazing consequences, but some people say it is possible to train everyone in the best way and achieve extraordinary amazing results at the end.

People who believe in God-given talents claim are-claiming everybody received got-his/her their talents from God god and these talents are latent inside every child at child-birth. They assert it is necessary to find to-find everybody's latent talent and nurture it in a perfect style and then everybody can achieve great/remarkable fantastic results. This group proposes s the idea that if you train somebody in not mother-born talents there will not be not magnificent achievement for the trainee and the trainer and this person can never be seen in a worldwide scope. Thus, it is important to discover potential/hidden beneath talents of children to guide and train them in an accurate way.

On the other hand,side there have always been were-always objectors who say if you train everyone efficiently as good as enough then at the end you will have a specialist in the branch you trained them. They claim professionals train more than ten hours a day and if you prepare the situation for everyone to do something especially in such a long time, they he/she will be a-specialists. In contrast, they believe in the magic of education and exercise and they affirm the effect of continuouses and concentrated training trains on everybody. Obviously they don't believe in mother-born talents and their motto is: "Success is the result of perseverance".

Personally, I think the critics objectors who say training is the key to success are right. In fact those who say "Practice makes perfect" are pointing to the key rule that training is the building blocks/ basis-brick of being perfect and the phrase which some say about God-given talents is not based on real facts. I believe every child despite the place where they are who-born is equal to any other child around the world and what makes them different is the effect of their ambience and the educations they receive learnt from the living environment.

In summary, the challenge between believers and objectors of mother-born talents will never ends and they always have samples to prove or disprove their themselves' and others' ideas, but the fact you can never forget it is the desired improving effect of training and education on mankind who got talents or not.
