

Book 8- Test 2- Writing task 2

Nowadays the way many people interact with each other has changed because of technology. In what ways has technology affected the types of relationships people make? Has this become a positive or negative development?

As the 21th century came along, people's connecting devices reshaped and somehow people's connecting ways were colored by technology. These alterations deformations are targeted for criticism aimed as easy targets by many critics, but ordinary people use them every day more than the past and of course enjoy them.

Users look at them as gifts of technology for them. They sign in different social networks every day and share their moments with friends and of course make new friends, however, these new friends are just net friends. Some even call them imaginary friends. Whatever you call them, users believe in them and share their moments with them more and more to the point that their physical connections with family and friends have been limited more than ever past, but they do not care and sink in deeper every time they turn on their cell phones or computers.

Critics try to wake them up from their dream rabbit sleep and tell them that finding new friends in such ways is just chasing a mirage. Besides, sharing personal data on the internet with unknown imaginary friends is not recommended for safety reasons because maybe some of them were wolves in sheep's clothing wolfs in sheep's skin and use this these information against them or for accusinge them of to something they had no role in didn't interfered with. Objectors of new communication methods reveal that some companies save your shared data in their data bases and they spy on you on what you like to eat or what do you prefer to wear; even what do you do as hobby. Using these data, companies target aim you for selling their commodities/stuff or sending smart commercials intelligently to people who probably use them.

In my opinion, easy ways for connecting to each other would be fun and useful though it is better to save privacy for your security. In fact using social networks will be fine if and only if you did not trespass privacy policies and remember to share your personal important information just with your physically known reliable or close friends.

For the last words, using new technological connecting methods of course has pros and cons but if you obey essential data-keeping principles, their benefits will outweigh conquer their disadvantages.
