

Some people believe that money is the most important factor for achieving happiness. However, others believe that happiness has nothing to do with money. Do you agree or disagree?

Nowadays having a large amount of money has become a priority for many people seeking to ensure a constant and long-term cheerful life. However, another group of people point out that the real peaceful life is much more than just earning enormous amounts of money. The former group consider wealth the best way to fulfill the mankind requirements and the latter look for spiritual things to reach the peace.

To begin with, achieving the highest level of accessibility to all kinds of life facilitators, many people work more and more to earn the money which their dreams involve. That is to say, if we have enough purchasing power to provide ourselves with all demanded equipment for our objectives, we will not only will feel happy, but also we can rely on the insurance which our bank account offers us to a rapidly improving future. For instance, the more you have money, the greater university you can attend which in turn can be conducive to current happy times as well as a brighter future.

In stark contrast, some people argue that thinking about the world and its leisure in this materialistic view cannot be a wholly positive ideology and maybe leads us to the wrong way. In other words, with many people working for economic goals throughout their lives, the meaningful aspects of the life has-have become forgotten. They point out that religious values and love have a direct correlation with our sense of happiness. To make an example, by and large all of us have read or heard a lot of stories about people who had lived in a wealthy family before they face either love or a mysterious spiritual event.

To put it in a nutshell, although being certain_ensure about comfortable life economically can be a common dream, especially among young people, from my point of view, our interior aspects of life can play a part in our life satisfaction too.
