

Some people think it would be a good idea for schools to teach every young person how to be a good parent. Do you agree or disagree with this opinion? Describe the skills a person needs to be a good parent.

Upbringing of children who can be sufficient parents in the future has always been the main concern of socialists and tactful individuals as well as /and also one of the most recent controversial issues. Therefore, if a society tends to open new horizons for its future this circumstance has to be considered more than ever.

On ~~in~~ one hand, some maintain that since the efficient juncture of learning process for every human being is commences commencing from his or her birth until the age of 18, there should be addition to our education system which helps them learn how to be a good father or mother. Moreover, it might have some influences on their parents changing their faulty attitudes against their children.

On the other hand, a widely held belief ~~believe~~ that teaching kids how to be a qualified parent in their schools would be time wasting due to their poor conception about this parental issue. They have the notion that not only is it an unnecessary manner of learning, but also would be harmful since we can allocate more time for them to teach them some more adequate issues.

To put it in a nutshell, I am of the opinion that there should be some decent method of teaching young students ~~them~~ how to talk with their imaginary children kindly, how to help them learn, how to encourage them to do whatever they want and how to give them self-confidence (running workshop where children pretend to be parents dealing with raising their offspring). Furthermore, we should not downplay the role of parents to achieve this goal since they spend plenty of time with their children and have a crucial role in their lives.
