Nowadays, a group of fathers and mothers are purchasing a wide range of toys for their sons and girls. Though, toys play an inevitable role in children's learning and growing up especially in their imagination and learning, buying a wide range of those has some drawbacks.

On the one hand, playing with toys results in both reinforcing the things they have learnt and sparking imagination in exploring the world. Children need to play with different types of toys whether simple toys, let them know how they work and what their parts are, or energy burning toys such as balls and mini basketball or educational and learning toys which help them in intellectual activities. That is why having varied toys are useful in upbringing of children. Moreover, if children have many types of toys not only will it prevent sibling fights/rivalry but also they will engage them with playing and their mother can perform various household activities with ease.

On the other hand, having a large number of toys, children will not completely understand the value of their possessions and sometimes they do not have enough time to play with all of them. Also if parents give too much and too often toys, it can spoil children which in turn results in negative effects on children's characters for example not only do they not appreciate ordinary gifts but also expect special and expensive toys.

In conclusion, I think even though/although toys/playthings are useful and have profoundly positive effects on children's growing up, parents need to avoid buying a large number of toys which renders them prone to negative behaviors.
