

Although more and more people read newspapers on the internet, newspapers will remain the most important source of news. Do you agree or disagree?

Thanks to advances in technology and the Internet, the way of communication, particularly the press, has been changed drastically over these years. Whereas a plethora of people subscribe to the belief that traditional newspapers will stay, the other group has a different view. From my point of view, online newspapers will be substituted for printed ones.

As far as pace is concerned, the internet provides a framework in which everyone everywhere could easily access endless information. Therefore, not only is the latest news on the net but also all individuals around the world have instant access to it. In other words, no sooner ishad the news ~~been~~ published than everyone could read it instantly. Besides, should the pace of information flow rise sharply, the need for the printed press reduces, as a result, the cost of newspapers probably falls down to less than half as well as less paper is wasted. According to recent surveys, a considerable amount of capital of the press will be saved when they reduce the number of publications, and that money will probably be invested in providing better services.

Furthermore, in terms of censorship, loads of news is spread by social media, so governments could not impose several restrictions on information. To exemplify, back in those days that-when the use of the internet was not common for everyone, the Middle-East press frequently was under pressure to censor or change some of the news due to the severe limitation. To put it simply, scarcely had-could the public ~~found~~ find a reliable source of information, hence the importance of freedom. However, now, a broad range of sources are provided for those who are interested in the news. 4-17 different contexts

In conclusion, in my view, since the internet offers a broad range of facilities for both groups of publishers and individuals from saving money to accessing immediate information/news and without censorship, all news will be available on the internet.
